Subject: Chat with John Ruiz
From: John Ruiz <jate1569@gmail.com>
To: barriticus@gmail.com

me: yo
me: I found this Jack London book John: yo
me: Iron Heel
me: written in 1907
me: he's a socialist
me: it's about a worker's labor revolt that is put down by the world's oligarchs, etc me: so it begins with the hero, who has the exact same biography as Jack London John: i c
me: actually, here
me: http://www.ordinary-gentlemen.com/2010/11/jack-london-the-socialist-ayn-rand/me: read this real quick, I put down the highlights John: why should I not fill my eyes with that which pleases me?
me: he didn't ask, he just took me: seriously, that happens later me: but go on me: you haven't gotten to the good stuff yet John: The Bishop was silent.
me: dude
me: He was a superman, a blond beast such as Nietzsche has described, and in addition he was aflame with democracy.
John: I know.
me: also his name is Everhard me: and he has the same biography as Jack London
me: EVERHARD
me: STRONGO
me: ROCK STRONGO
John: I almost lost old Skip that day. Even as he was sleeping on the operating table, he was still teaching me. That day, I became a young man. Why, in childhood and youth, we wish time to pass so quickly. We want to grow up so fast. Yet, as adults, we wish just the opposite.
me: THESE ARE MY THOUGHTS
John: They buried him out under the elm tree, they said. That wasn't totally true. For he really lay buried in my heart.
me: Charlie St. Cloud
John: So did you finish reading the book?
John: My dog skip me: nah, I'm on chapter 4

me: I know, just wanted to mention Charlie St. Cloud me: seriously every fifth paragraph is a homage to Everhard's masculinity John: i have to leave now.